Bulkeley Family Returns to GTMO

In 1964 when Fidel Castro claimed the Navy was “stealing water” from Cuba, then base commander, Rear Admiral John D. Bulkeley, ordered workmen to cut and lift from the ground a large section of the incoming Yateras River water pipe. The pipe passed over the hill at the Northeast Gate Command Post and proved to be completely dry.

This wasn’t the first time Bulkeley bucked the odds and stood fast in the face of adversity. Years earlier it was then Lt. John Bulkeley who evacuated Gen. Douglas MacArthur from the Philippines on his PT boat through the Japanese patrolled islands in one of the most harrowing escapes of the war. For his service over a four month period in defense of the Philippine Islands, VADM Bulkeley was awarded the Medal of Honor.

Today, GTMO honors Admiral Bulkeley with several landmarks – Bulkeley Hill, Camp Bulkeley and Bulkeley Hall. Bulkeley Hall displays several artifacts from his illustrious naval career. He served on active duty for more than 55 years.

In December 2000, five years after his death in 1996, the Navy and the nation immortalized his name with the commissioning of the USS Bulkeley, the newest Arleigh Burke-class guided missile destroyer.

In October 2002, two of Bulkeley’s daughters, Gina and Diana, returned to re-visit the base and welcome the ship as it entered Guantanamo Bay where the Bulkeley name is so well remembered.

Last week, Gina Bulkeley-Day returned with her husband Steve, and the woman credited with inspiring Bulkeley throughout his adult life. Hilda “Alice” Bulkeley, who married a young Navy Officer she met in China and accompanied through a lifetime of accomplishment and adventure, was again in GTMO to view the base that she came to love during her stay here in the early sixties. Less than two months after their arrival at GTMO, Castro accused the base of stealing water from Cuba and Bulkeley met the challenge head on.

Throughout her tour of once familiar surroundings, Alice Bulkeley entertained everyone around her with amusing stories of her stay here and the challenges presented her by the four of her five children who accompanied them to GTMO.

Above: They called him the “Sea Wolf” for his daring World War II exploits in Europe and the Pacific. He’s a Navy legend and the recipient of the Medal of Honor, Navy Cross and several other medals for heroism. If you are interested in learning more about the Adm. Bulkeley, take a look at the biography “SEA WOLF: The Daring Exploits of Navy Legend John D. Bulkeley” by William B. Breuer.

GTMO's DEFY Program Needs Volunteers

Naval Base Guantanamo Bay's Drug Education for Youth (DEFY) program is looking for volunteers to assist with helping the children of their fellow service members stay healthy and drug free.

The DEFY program is in its seventh year at NAVBASE GTMO and is run primarily by personnel from the base's security force. Additional duties have taken priority for those personnel, and help from other departments, as well as civilian DoD employees and dependents, is needed to keep the DEFY program strong.

Anyone interested in being a part of the DEFY team at GTMO should contact MACS Lou Martinez at 84129, 7361, or 3712. Time is of the essence. Martinez is looking for someone who can attend the DEFY training conference next month.

So what exactly is DEFY? DEFY is a program that strengthens youth by providing them with the resistance and life skills they need to avoid involvement in drugs, gangs and crime. The program also provides important lessons on study skills, violence prevention, personal safety, diversity, conflict resolution and Internet safety.

The positive role-model mentoring and community outreach provided by DEFY improves the quality of life of military personnel and their families. It is designed to produce graduates with character, leadership and confidence to engage in positive, healthy lifestyles as drug-free citizens.

The year-long program includes a one-week summer leadership camp followed up by a year of mentorship. Both phases combine education on health, physical fitness, citizenship, and life skills. It gives children the skills they need to grow up smart and strong in a world that can present them with a confusing array of choices.

Martinez said adult volunteers are needed to help military dependents learn the skills they'll need as they grow up. It takes at least one adult volunteer for every eight children who participate in the DEFY program.

"This program is also an ideal example of what is possible when people unite for a worthwhile cause," he said. "It takes a lot of energy, and most importantly, a strong commitment to make a difference in the lives of our young people."

DEFY also relies heavily on the involvement of parents, who receive information and resources such as referrals to other youth organizations and Internet safety.

"DEFY is not a replacement for parents," Martinez said. "It's a tool for parents to use to help their children realize their potential."

Since its beginning in 1993, more than 35,000 youth have graduated from the DEFY program. The DEFY website is located at www.hq.navy.mil/defy.

Cuban Community Center Opens

After many years of dedication and hard work, the Cuban exiles living in GTMO now have a special place to call their own. The new Cuban Community Center held its grand opening in Center Bargo on Thursday, Jan. 22.

"They now have a place to gather with their friends," said Cynthia Miller, Cuban Community Assistance Program Manager. "The Cuban Community Center is designed to offer comfort and entertainment. The center is fully furnished, including a kitchen, with new purchases, bought with the Cuban community in mind."

At the center they can cook, play cards, dominos, bingo, or simply sit in the library area and read while enjoying the peace and quite. A 53" television and a surround sound system provide entertainment and music. The center also has CD collection featuring artists such as Celia Cruz, Beny More, La Orquesta Aragon. For those who would rather stay outdoors, the center has park benches and comfortable lawn furniture so they can enjoy the breeze.

"The grand opening resulted in a successful event, as it was most residents' first glimpse of the center," explained Miller. "The residents were pleasantly surprised and were ready to enjoy their center."

"The weekend following the opening, some residents decided to bring food, get together, invite other base residents, and, before we knew it, there was a domino's tournament," said Miller. "I hope every weekend results in happy get togethers for the Cuban community and their friends at Guantanamo Bay."

The Tradition Continues

Cuban American Friendship Day 2004

Each year as the Naval Base celebrates Cuban American Friendship Day, a new milestone is reached, new celebrants join the festivities and, sadly, we say good-bye to more of our friends. That was especially evident this year as we again see that one distinguished group, our Cuban commuters, grows ever smaller. An integral part of the base infrastructure for so many decades, the last five members of this group will retire over the next couple of years.

Still, we have what we have always had, a community of Cuban and American friends working together to make GTMO the truly unique family that it is.

Below: Mig Hettler, Deputy Supply Officer, was honored by the Cuban community. Mr. Butler presents her with their American of the Year Award.

Below: If you saw last week's Gazette, you saw this year's winning posters and essays for the annual contest. Cynthia Miller presents a special thank you certificate to Katrinia Filkins for the poster that she made.

If It's Too Good To Be True...

Sailors Cautioned Against Scams

By JO1 Martin Wright
Naval Forces Europe Public Affairs

Scams. It seems to be a consistent problem that affects military members more than others, but experts say there is much that service members can do to prevent becoming victims.

In a report titled "In Harm's Way," the National Consumer Law Center (NCLC) has analyzed the problem and has come up with some solutions.

The report concludes that military members have and will be targets, due to predictable paycheck dates and job security. It also cited the military culture that expects its members to lead orderly, financially stable lives.

Ironically, it is often attempts to keep their finances in order that lead members to make poor decisions and spiral into major financial difficulties. And once an individual gets that far in debt, it is no longer just the individual's problem; it becomes the command's problem, as well.

Some of the most common scams, while not technically illegal, can still separate Sailors from their hard earned cash. One of the most common is the postdated check. This takes the form of a loan in the amount of one's paycheck.

In order to get this money, a service member must give the lender a postdated check that includes the amount of the loan – plus interest at a rate of about 300 percent.

While the paycheck advance is most common, the NCLC found other scams, including loans for car titles and the purchase of nearly worthless catalog coupons. These businesses are often located right outside the gates of military bases.

They hire former military personnel, who are able to relate to the military members they prey on. These businesses all find ways around the on-base solicitation rules by advertising in the military "Times" magazines found in almost every Exchange facility.

According to the NCLC, many members mistakenly assume that these are official publications, but they are not. They are civilian enterprise newspapers, with absolutely no endorsement from the DoD.

Scams that target the military don't stop when the member retires. Another popular scam includes the selling of veterans' retirement benefits, which are usually at horrible rates for the borrower.

More troubling is the fact that, according to the NCLC, such reassessment of benefits is illegal.

What makes these situations all the more tragic is the fact that there are numerous legitimate service relief societies, which not only offer financial management training, but also give out grants and no-interest loans for people with money problems.

In fact, the NCLC has found that the claims of bankruptcy and complaints against the scam companies fell by 80 percent when the local relief society chapter started running advertisements countering the unscrupulous loan agencies.

An international effort to decrease the likelihood of becoming a scam victim includes an information sharing campaign, as well as international cross-border agreements with the U.S., Canada, U.K. and Australian law enforcement.

But the prevalence of Internet scams (four of the top five scams targeted by U.S. and U.K. law enforcement were Internet-based) make international borders less of a barrier.

Taking shortcuts to acquire money usually leads to long-term problems that keep the individual permanently in debt, or spending more money than they should.

The best defense against a scam is to recognize that if something sounds wrong, or just too easy, it probably is.
